

New composite space-time models for studying climate-water-health systems using non Euclidean metrics

E. Porcu (1), J. Mateu (1), G. Christakos

1. ,<space> Department ,<space> of ,<space> Mathematics, ,<space> Universitat,<space> Jaume,<space> I, ,<space> Campus,<space> Riu,<space> Sec., ,<space>Castellón,<space> de,<space> la,<space> Plana,<space> E-12071, ,<space> Spain,<space> (porcu@mat.uji.es).
2. ,<space>Department,<space> of,<space> Geography, ,<space> SDSU, ,<space> San,<space> Diego, ,<space> California, ,<space> USA.

In this paper we propose new classes of composite space-time covariance models that can be used to represent integrated climate-water-health systems under conditions of uncertainty. We analyze the impact of the choice of the appropriate norm (non Euclidean space-time metrics in general) for estimation and prediction across space-time. The basic properties of space-time models are examined and their effects on the integrated systems are considered.